John F. Kennedy

He looked to the future—with God as his helper. Something of the spirit of the man may be seen in his 1963 Thanksgiving Day Proclamation. He wrote in part —

"On Thanksgiving Day let us gather in sanctuaries dedicated to worship, and in homes blessed by family affection to express our gratitude for the glorious gifts of God, and let us humbly and earnestly pray that He will continue to guide and sustain us in the great unfinished tasks of achieving peace, justice, understanding among all men and nations and of ending misery and suffering wherever they exist."

To the man whose spirit was thus, and who spoke thus —We pay tribute. Many are those who have paid the supreme sacrifice out of love of their country, their people, their way of live. President Kennedy gave his life in the line of duty. He sought and accepted the honor of the office of President— He accepted the duties of his office and labored untiringly therein. He faced the dangers, seemingly unafraid. He called upon the name of God as his helper — and I am confident that if he could, he would say, that God has not let him down, but is rather working our His eternal decrees.

And so, as we today, participate in this memorial: Are not so much to pity the President who was struck down by the bullet; but should pity more the assasin, whose mind and soul had become so distorted as to do such a terrible deed, or even, the assassin's slayer. We might pity those individuals, or groups of individuals — who have been referred to as pockets of hate, whose minds are so filled with suspicion, distrust, hate, that their lives are embittered; We might pity those whose lives are so without purpose, they can only criticise those who make an honest try. We should pity the President's family, we should pity more those who have no capacity for grief. Today, we are not to pity so much the new President, upon whom the mantle of our government has fallen so quickly, and under such difficult circumstances, as we are to pity those who could rise and share the burden of responsibility in high places or low, but who will only sit and find fault with what others do — who have not the courage to examine themselves.

Our new President has called upon us to make this a day of rededication —As Christian citizens, we are challenged —to follow truth, — to walk by faith in God, — to work with all our might for righteousness, — to act courageously, — to sacrifice whatever the cost— to live with love in our hearts toward God and Man — even our enemies. May God truly be our helper. This tribute we offer in the rededication of our lives.
